Over recent decades there have been some clear achievements in the acknowledgement of the importance of addressing noise the community. The focus has been on the major noise sources associated with transportation and industry that globally affect the larger number of people. The publication of guidelines for noise level limits and for establishing noise control policies and approaches to noise management provides a good basis for further applications. This talk discusses some of the successes and also some of the remaining challenges in developing and adopting the most appropriate noise management and control policies.

Marion Burgess is a Research Officer at UNSW, Canberra, and has been working in the area of community noise management and control for many decades. This presentation will be similar to the plenary paper to be presented at Internoise 2013, Innsbruck, Austria, 15-18 September 2013.
